PARIS CABINET QUITS OFFICE, MILLERAND TO FOLLOW SUIT

Stormy Scenes In Parliament Over Resolution

RADICALS FIRM

Vote To Refuse Relations With "Negative" Legislators

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, June 10.—The Chamber of Deputies today voted in favor of a Left resolution refusing to enter into relations with a Ministry which by its composition was a negation of the rights of Parliament, and adjourning all discussion until a Government in conformity with the country's sovereign will present itself before it.

The Cabinet immediately called at the Elysee and presented its resignation.

It was later officially announced that M. Millerand intended to resign the Presidency.

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, June 10.—M. Millerand's message was read in the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon by M. Francois Marsal, the Premier, and in the Senate by M. Ratier, the Keeper of the Seals. In the course of the message the President stated that he had faithfully kept the solemn engagement he had made before the country. He refused to desert his post and called upon Parliament to respect the Constitution. "You will respect the Constitution. If you disregarded it, if it was intended henceforth that arbitrary action of the majority could compel the President of the Republic to resign for political reasons, the President of the Republic would be only a plaything in the hands of the parties. You will assist me to avert such a formidable danger. Dangerous counsellors are striving in party interests to secure that the new Parliament shall open with a revolutionary act. The Chamber will refuse to follow them. Faithful to its traditions, the Senate will wish to remain, as it has always been in the gravest conjunctures, the defender of the Constitution."

The new Marsal Government made a declaration that it was only formed to enable Parliament to pronounce itself constitutionally and therefore submitted no program. It asks Parliament to decide whether constitutional laws shall remain "intangible" above party politics, or whether it disapproves the principles laid down in the President's message, which are the basis of the Constitution. The Government appeals to the conscience and reason of Parliament, the proceedings in which should be held on clear issues, as the vote concerns the future regime and respect for legality, the guarantees of Republican institutions and the safeguards of public liberties.

After an animated debate, during which the Communists stood and sang the Internationale, the Chamber voted by 329 to 214 in favor of a Left resolution, unanimously adopted earlier in the day by the Left groups, declaring: "The Chamber is resolved not to enter relations with a Ministry which by its composition is a negation of the rights of Parliament. It refuses the unconstitutional debate to which it is invited, and has decided to adjourn all discussion until a Government, constituted in conformity with the country's sovereign will, presents itself before it."

The Senate by 154 votes to 144 passed a resolution adjourning debate on the interpellation of Senator Cheron, who was thus prevented from presenting the case for the President. The Senate then adjourned until tomorrow.

In the Chamber for a long time the deputies of the Left, ac-

Peking Dust

A Daily Chronicle Of The Capital's Gossip And News

(By Our Staff Correspondent)

Peking, June 9.—Peking has just passed through a week of receptions, garden parties and dinners and dances, chiefly due to the fact that Governor-General Merlin of French Indo-China, has been visiting here, making it, all-in-all, the most hectic social week that the capital has enjoyed in several moons. The festivities really began last week when Captain D'Oisy landed here after his flight from Shanghai as the French at that time spread themselves in entertaining the famous flyer. The Chinese, not to be outdone in hospitality, also arranged several brilliant affairs, includng the reception at the Nan Yuan flying field.

Before Captain O'Oisy hopped off for Mukden Governor-General Merlin arrived and since then not a night has passed but what there has been something on the social calendar. First came the official reception at the French Legation giver, by M. and Mme. Fleuriau at which the Governor-General met all the members of the French colony, high Chinese officials, members of the Legations, and a few fortunate citizens of other countries.

Then came the British Legation garden party, a brilliant afternoon affair that was somewhat dimmed by the rain that fell. As one of the society matrons of the capital said Peking could go without rain for months and months and months but let something be arranged at which the belles of the capital could show off their latest afternoon frocks for the first time in a long time—and then it began raining to beat the band.

On the heels of the British garden party M. Merlin was tendered a reception at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Madame Koo, the charming and popular wife of Dr. Wellington Koo, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, was to have presided at the function, but received news of the death of her father in Singapore and left for there, via Shanghai, immediately. Madame Koo, Mei Lang-fang, former Chinese Minister to France served as hostess in place of Madame Koo, Mei Lang-fang, China's most famous actor, presented a playlet following the reception and dinner.

On Friday night Dr. and Mrs. Jacob Gould Schurman held a large reception and dance, followed by supper, at the American Legation in honor of M. Merlin. In that connection it is interesting to note that M. Merlin has just been named as the new French Ambassador to Japan and that persistent rumors are afloat that Dr. Schurman is to be the new American Ambassador to Japan.

The Schurman's had issued a large number of invitations for their party and the Legation grounds were a moving sea of Peking's socially elect, Chinese and foreign. Lanterns were hung in long festoons all about the grounds for the reception and about the supper tables, and the commodious ballroom in the Minister's residence allowed those inclined toward dancing full scope to display their terpsichorean abilities. Wonderful weather prevailed and the affair was probably the most brilliant of the season. Several Shanghailanders, French and American, were among those present.

Peking goes in for the strict formalities of social functions to a much greater extent than pleasure-loving Shanghai. Calls, almost passe in Shanghai, are quite the thing here. One must leave ones card at at least his or her own Legation and upon perhaps a dozen of the grand dames of the capital or be left on the outside looking in. If you leave your card and pass the social censor there is every reason to believe that you will participate in ever so many functions. And as Peking leans toward parties in homes more than dancing in cafes or cabarets to not be among the socially elect is a calamity for anyone who stays here any length of time.

A number of the social leaders of the city have regular calling days at which the conventions are strictly adhered to and calls are likewise made during the proper hours of the day. It is said that some lazy souls have resorted to the device of sending their

French Community Here Gives Hearty Welcome To Indo-China Governor

Merlin, Returning From Visit To Japan And North China, Is Guest At Reception At Consulate; Denies Reports Of Secret Mission

Hundreds of residents of the French community of Shanghai assembled at the French Consulate-General yesterday afternoon to join in an enthusiastic welcome to M. Martial Merlin, governor-general of French Indo-China who with Madame Merlin, is stopping off in Shanghai after a tour of Japan and North China.

M. Merlin is one of the ablest and best-known of the French colonial executives and at various times has served as governor of a great many of the French colonies. The purpose of his trip to Japan, he said, despite persistent reports in London and Paris that negotiations for a new commercial treaty between France and Japan were in progress, was merely to pay a friendly visit and to develop trade relations between French Indo-China and Japan.

"My visit," he said, "was undertaken at the suggestion of M. Claudel, French ambassador to Tokio, with the approval of the Japanese government. Its main purpose was to investigate the possibilities of developing trade relations between Japan and Indo-China. Diplomatic affairs are quite outside my province as governor of Indo-China and there was no political significance in my visit."

CONGRATULATES PRINCE

One of the chief acts performed by M. Merlin in Tokio was to present to the Crown Prince and Princess or Japan congratulations upon the occasion of their marriage. He was also instructed to express again the sympathy of France and French Indo-China for Japan's losses in last September's earthquake. M. Merlin also took advantage of the opportunity to study labor conditions in Japan and to obtain first-hand knowledge of commercial conditions with a view to development of trade between the colony over which he presides and Japan.

M. Merlin was emphatic in denying the reports that he was sent to Tokio to draft a new treaty.

"I had no instructions whatsoever to prepare a treaty with Japan," he said. "That would be the duty of the ambassador and during the time that I was in Tokio no text was drafted. Perhaps, however, if it is found possible, Indo-China will modify the tariff rates in regard to certain articles but in any case that would have to be submitted to the French government for approval because Indo-China possesses no fiscal autonomy."

M. Merlin spoke heartily of the reception which had been accorded him and his party both in Japan and China.

"It has been a wonderful trip," he said. "I am sure that as a result of this the people of the East will now know that there is a country called Indo-China. Despite our proximity many people in the Far East do not know of conditions in Indo-China. We have a nation of more than 20,000,000 people and it is growing more and more important in many ways. It is our desire to do all that we can to assist the people of China and we hope that it will be possible for us to establish more and more cordial relations as time goes on."

WILL AID AVIATORS

Incidentally one of M. Merlin's secretaries revealed that despite the many functions which he attended yesterday he had taken sufficient time to send messages to officials of the Indo-China government which would insure that everything possible would be done to assist the American 'round-the-world aviators and Squadron Leader MacLaren, British aviator, in their journeys over Indo-China.

M. Merlin and his party which includes the presidents of the Chambers of Commerce of Saigon, Haiphong and Hanoi, M. Chatel, chief-of-staff to the governor, M. Jeanbrau, director of political affairs of the Indo-China government, and Captain Bernard, aide-de-camp to the governor, spent yesterday morning in an official visit to the Chinese authorities on which they were accompanied by M. Wilden, French consul-general at Shanghai. The party were the guests of the French bishops at tiffin, and during the early afternoon hours official Chinese visitors were received at the Consulate.

The scene at the reception at the consulate later in the afternoon was a colorful one. In honor of the governor-general's visit the French tricolor new from buildings all up and down rue de Consulat. A special cordon of Annamite policemen were drawn up in the consulate grounds and a band from the French cruiser "Jules Ferry" played during the reception. Among the notable callers were Messieurs Le Bris and Fano, members of the French municipal council; M. Bordelongue, manager of the Banque Industrielle de Chine; M. de May, manager of the Indo-China bank; Commandante de Maubeuge, commander of the "Jules Ferry;" Commandante D'Arvieu, chief-of-staff to the admiral of the French Asiatic squadron who was unable to attend because of absence from Shanghai at this time; M. Paturel, president of the French Chamber of Commerce and M.

AMERICAN CONSUL OFFERS PRIZE FOR "FOURTH" ESSAYS

Mr. Cunningham Announces Independence Day Contest For School Children

Each essay will be judged on its general excellence with regard to content and literary form by judges, one of whom shall be designated by the principal of each of the following schools: St. John's University, the Shanghai College and the Shanghai American School.

There will be two groups of gradings—one for the higher and the second for the lower school grades. A prize of fifteen dollars local currency will be given to the author of the best essay in each of the grades and seven dollars for the second in each.

The prize essays will be read at the annual flag-raising exercises at the American Consulate-General on the Fourth of July. It is expected to make this an annual competition and the reading of the essays a regular part of the Fourth of July program.

The manuscripts should not be signed but in each case must be accompanied by a separate sheet giving the true name, address, school, grade and exact date of birth of the contestant. These sheets will be held by the Consul-General, who will place an identifying number on each essay and its corresponding sheet, and who will ascertain the names of the winners upon the return of the essays and grades from the judges.

Consul-General Edwin S. Cunningham invites the American boys and girls in any school in Shanghai to prepare an essay on a Fourth of July subject such as:

1—(a) The American Flag in China before 1870.

(b) America in Old China.

(c) America and the Building of Shanghai.

2—(a) America and the Future China.

(b) The Place of American Ideals and Institutions in China.

(c) What is a good American in China?

The competition is open to all American boys and girls born since July 1, 1904. Contestants will be graded according to two classifications: these in any school who are not above the eighth grade (or eighth year of school life) and those above the eighth grade.

The essays should not exceed one thousand words in length, must be written on only one side of the paper and should be typewritten.

The manuscripts must be in the hands of the American Consul-General not later than June 25, 1924.

It should be borne in mind that it is desired to encourage more extensively the study of American institutions and particularly American activities in China.

The buildings are shown on the reverse of the medal.

NO RECOGNITION OF THE SOVIET BY MUKDEN WARLORD

Affairs Of Chinese Eastern Railway To Remain Unaltered

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 11.—A Harbin telegram received in Peking today says that a Harbin paper publishes an order, issued by the Chief of Police of the Special Areas, and dated June 7, which says that acting on instructions from Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the Chief of Police asserts that Marshal Chang cannot agree to recognise the Soviets. Therefore until a special arrangement between Marshal Chang Tso-lin and the Soviets is signed, the affairs of the Chinese Eastern Railway and its employers must remain unaltered. The order goes on to say that any person guilty of wilfully dismissing or replacing employers of the Chinese Eastern Railway will be severely punished. The Chief of Police then instructs subordinates to watch responsible officials of the C. E. R. lest they leave their posts and go abroad, and also to watch regarding their dismissal by anybody.

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 11.—The Morning Post suggests that M. Litvinoff, who has just arrived in London, will endeavor to offer the Chinese Eastern Railway at the Anglo-Soviet Conference as a pledge for the much-desired loan. The newspaper surmises that the move is not only intended to induce London financial circles to open negotiations for a loan, but to blackmail France into granting the Soviet de jure recognition, inasmuch as considerable French interests are involved through the Paris branch of the Russo-Asiatic Bank, who are the present concessionaries of the Chinese Eastern Railway.

Strike Situation Reported Improved

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 10.—The railway managers have agreed to meet the Locomotive Society's representatives on June 12. The latter in the meantime are delaying the ballot, which they threatened if the railway managers did not agree to meet them to discuss certain anomalies arising from the last strike settlement.

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 10.—The railway strike situation is officially reported to be still improving. Although 39 stations are still closed, trains are operating on all lines. Fifteen hundred more of the uniformed staff have returned to work.

The difficulty now is to increase the output of the powerhouses so as to increase the number of trains running.

Meanwhile the strike headquarters claim that the strike is extending to the Great Central Railway. The shopmen at Anerley and Nottingham are now out, and the shopmen and powerhouse men on the London Underground are solid. The effect will be felt very shortly because repairs to the rolling-stock are piling up.

WATCHMAN SLAIN, ONE WOUNDED BY ARMED ROBBERS

Bandit Gang Shoots Two In Ferry Road Hold-Up

A Chinese watchman is dead and another Chinese lies wounded in the leg as the result of an armed robbery at 51 Ferry Road early last evening.

The robbers, three in number, entered the premises of the Shanghai Brick and Tile Factory at about 7:45 p.m. two of them showing automatic pistols. They secured $70 in the place and fired three shots, one striking the watchman and the other hitting another Chinese in the leg. They then escaped. All spoke the Kompo dialect, it is stated.

The wounded men were rushed to Shantung Road Hospital, where the watchman died at about midnight. The other victim is not believed to be seriously hurt.

Another shooting, accidental, occurred last evening on Cemetery Road, when a Special constable operating with a search party dropped his pistol, which was discharged, the bullet striking a pedestrian in the leg. The wound is not serious.

Do You Believe In Signs?

Just as one may discover sermons in stones and books in running brooks, so unconscious humor not infrequently lurks in signboards of Chinese shops when the owners thereof decide to take a hand in the gentle art of English composition. A few choice specimens of unintended wit will be found in the coming issue of The China Press Sunday Pictorial.

Inauguration of the new Government takes place tomorrow morning.

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, June 11.—The Cabinet, which is being installed at the Palace this afternoon, is greeted with satisfaction by all shades of political and financial opinion, though occasionally the customary objection to a coalition is raised. Public opinion especially welcomes the inclusion of Mr. Inukai and Mr. Takahashi, to the latter of whom a notable tribute is paid for his having abandoned the claims he might have made as ex-Premier and accepting a post of lesser importance.

The Jiji says: "If the formation of the Ministry reflects the solidarity of the three parties, there is reason to hope that the spirit of co-operation manifested will enable the carrying out with resolution of domestic and foreign policies."

The Kokumin declares that no former Ministry has ever so well represented the will of the people and it looks to the future with confidence.

The Miyako expects much from Viscount Kato's diplomatic experience.

The Asahi points out the tremendous power wielded by the Cabinet with the majority in the Diet and hopes that that power will be exercised with discretion.

Viscount Goto declares that the Cabinet is ideal. The promptness with which it was formed testifies to the unity and harmony pervading the three parties. He says that the men selected represent the highest type of statesmanship and Japan may be congratulated on her new Government.

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, June 11.—The Minister for Foreign Affairs, Baron Shidehara, who made a statement to the press today, admitted that very difficult problems confronted him and that more difficult problems were, perhaps, coming, however, his policy would not be Machiavellian or aggressive, but along the path of justice and peace.

He said that he was not afraid to seek to realise the mission of the Empire by observing the lofty spirit revealed in the treaties of Versailles and of Washington.

LAUDS COOLIDGE

Asks Party To Declare For Adhesion To World Court

(Reuter's American Service)

Cleveland, Ohio, June 10.—The Republican National Convention mustered at 11 o'clock this morning. Mr. Theodore Burton, a member of the House of Representatives, was elected temporary chairman. He delivered a "keynote" address praising President Coolidge as unsurpassed among the rulers of the earth in honesty of purpose, courage and high devotion to the welfare of his country. He declared: "By far the greater share of our citizenship looks to President Coolidge rather than Congress for leadership." After recommending that the Republican Party should declare for American adhesion to the World Court with merely the Harding-Hughes reservations, Mr. Burton expressed regret that Congress had not heeded the President's wishes with regard to the immigration legislation. He advocated an educational campaign with regard to taxation, so that it should be generally realised that not all the burden of taxation fell on those who first paid their tax.

EXPERT HERE TO LECTURE ON RADIO PHASES

Prof. Robertson Will Describe Latest Developments Saturday

The latest development in the science of radio will be given by Prof. C. H. Robertson of the Educational Department of the Y.M.C.A. in a lecture before the China Society of Science and Arts at 5 o'clock next Saturday afternoon, June 14, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Bena, 90 Jessfield Road. Members of the society and all other persons interested are invited.

If the weather permits, the lecture will be given out doors with the apparatus arranged on a veranda and the audience seated on the lawn. A newly invented wave drawing machine will be used for the first time at this lecture. Heterodyne reception of radio messages heretofore has been a mystery to most amateurs, and this strange process is to be made clear.

Some other new and interesting features of radio that will be presented by Prof. Robertson and clarified with the use of various specially invented and constructed equipment will be the following:

The wave trap and how it catches and destroys vagrant disturbing intruders in radio circuits.

The action of the elusive electron in the magic vacuum tube.

How radio is being used to test certain psychological phenomena.

The radio compass and its uncanny power of enabling ships to find their course when lost in a fog.

Radio and polar exploration.

Radio as a democratiser of scientific research and of the application to science.

How radio waves from the antipodes are measured and how frequencies of millions per second are numbered.

The disc prism and radio pictures.

Prof. Robertson has traveled over 10,000 miles in China giving radio lectures. Not long ago he made a tour through the Yellow River Valley, delivering a total of 125 addresses to audiences which totalled over 55,000 persons.

It was in 1902 that Prof. Robertson gave up his work on the Engineering faculty of Purdue University to come to China under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. His first radio lecture was given in 1906 in Tientsin. Later he constructed the Y.M.C.A. Lecture Laboratory in Shanghai.

"As a lecture subject, radio has gripped China more powerfully than any other subject which I have used in twenty years of lecture experience," Prof. Robertson declared yesterday. "It is the most popular among some 300 illustrated lectures which our educational department supplies to the various Y.M.C.A.'s and other educational institutions throughout China."

In the lecture next Saturday, Prof. Robertson will give the latest discoveries and developments of radio, a subject on which he is recognised as a high authority, and to which he has given close study for about twenty years.

cording to a concerted plan, maintained a frigid silence. They were determined to treat the Government as non-existent. None but the Communists uttered a word until the ex-Minister, M. Reipel, in the course of an eighty minute speech deliberately chose provocative phrases with the object of drawing the Left from their shell. The atmosphere became more electric. The Communists greeted references to M. Millerand with shouts of "Renegade," and sang the Internationale. Shortly afterwards a message was communicated to the Chamber that the Senate had adjourned pending the discussion in the Chamber. The Left deputies were unable to restrain their enthusiasm. They rose en bloc and cheered for several minutes, shouting "Vive le Senate." Subsequently they relapsed into silence again and listened indifferently, taking no part in the debate. When the result of the division was announced, however, they again broke out into thundering cheers.

The Chamber then adjourned until tomorrow to hear "a communication from the Government," namely, the President's resignation.

An official announcement was made after the results of the sittings in the Chamber and Senate were known that M. Millerand intended to resign. The communique said that the Premier and the Cabinet called at the Elysee to inform the President of the events in the Chamber and Senate. M. Millerand thanked the Cabinet for the assistance they had given him in the defence of the Constitution. When the Cabinet tendered their resignation, M. Millerand replied that he had made up his own mind to resign the Presidency. He asked the Cabinet to continue its functions for the time being.

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, June 11.—President Millerand's letter, which merely announces his resignation, will be read in Parliament this afternoon. Tomorrow the Left parties will choose a candidate for the presidential election, which will be held on Friday. The candidateships of M. Painleve and M. Doumergue are now being contemplated.

M. Francois Marsal will lead the new President to the Elysee and resign. On Saturday M. Herriot will be charged to form a Cabinet, which probably will be presented to the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate on Monday or Tuesday.

CANADA'S PREMIER TELLS POSITION ON LAUSANNE PACT

Thinks Dominion Government Should Have Been Consulted

(Reuter's American Service)

Ottawa, June 10.—In the Dominion House of Commons today a statement on the Government's attitude on the Lausanne Treaty was made by the Premier, Mr. Mackenzie King. He contended that the British Government's procedure in asking Canada to ratify a treaty imposing obligations on her when Canada was not invited to participate in the negotiations and was not directly among the signatories was a serious departure from the position of equality of status, adopted at Versailles and elsewhere. He pointed out, however, that the ending of the war with Turkey by the King signing the peace treaty was binding on the whole Empire, just as the declaration of war on Turkey was binding. The Premier in conclusion said that he believed that an Imperial Parliament was impossible and that an Imperial Council would be disruptive. He expressed the opinion that any steps to make clearer their full rights to self-government would conduce to the security and permanency of their allied nationhood within the Empire.

Mr. King said that legally and technically Canada would be bound by the ratification of the treaty, but her moral obligations under the treaty would be vastly different from those imposed by the treaty of Versailles in view of the different manner in which the negotiations had been carried on.

Mr. Meighen, the leader of the Opposition, sharply criticised the Government for tacitly acquiescing in the course of the British Government.

Aviation Corps For Formosa And Hokkaido, Plan

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, June 4.—If the expense, estimated to cost some twenty million yen initially, and five million yen for yearly maintenance, is sanctioned, the War Department proposes to establish an aviation corps in Formosa and Hokkaido, as part of its program calling for six additional aviation corps throughout the country.

In connection with this, the military authorities plan to submit to the coming Diet a supplementary estimate of Y.1,300,000, for the development of the country's air-routes, which includes the building of air stations and observation posts, to guide aircraft flying by night and to inform them of weather conditions.

Thief Who Stabbed Chinese Constable Given Three Years

Three years' imprisonment, to be followed by expulsion from the Settlement, was the sentence meted out by Assessor Martin and Magistrate Kwan at the Mixed Court yesterday in the case of the Chinese thief who robbed a French sailor on Szechuen Road the evening of June 3 and then stabbed a Chinese constable who attempted to arrest him.

The robbery occurred at an exchange shop where Marius Linquet, a sailor from the French gunboat Jules Ferry, had stopped to have $30 in notes changed into francs. The Chinese grabbed the money and ran down Jinkee Road and up Yuenmingyuen Road to Peking Road corner, where Constable 1282 grappled with him. The accused thereupon drew a knife and slashed the policeman on both hands. Two special constables who dashed up, together with a Sikh constable, overpowered the thief.

Peking Premier To Stay In Office

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 2.—The situation created by the submission to the President of Mr. Sun Pao-chi's resignation has been brought to an end by the issue of a Chihling Mandate last evening in which the President instructs Premier Sun to remain in office. The mandate speaks of the "valuable services rendered by Mr. Sun upon whom the President relies to carry on the work of the Government."

Correction

Through an inadvertence, an editorial published on Sunday conveying the thanks of the American community for the splendid arrangements made for the reception here of America's round-the-world fliers, referred to Captain H. E. Hillman, harbormaster, as "Mr." Hillman.

French Welcome Governor Merlin

Fredet, general secretary of the Chamber.

M. WILDEN SPEAKS

As the governor-general entered the consulate the band struck up the "Marseillaise" and all stood at attention. M. Wilden, in a speech in which he reviewed the notable career of M. Merlin, welcomed the distinguished visitor to Shanghai and extended his congratulations over the success of his visit to Japan.

M. Merlin in a brief reply thanked M. Wilden and the French community of Shanghai for the enthusiastic reception which had been accorded him here and expressed the hope that his visit might be the means of cementing even more the good relations between French residents of China and the Indo-China government. Indo-China, he pointed out, was ready at all times to give what assistance it could to French citizens everywhere. M. Merlin then proposed a toast to "France, the coloniser."

Last night M. Merlin and his party were guests at a dinner given at the Consulate to which prominent French residents of Shanghai were invited.

This morning, a visit will be paid to the police department and other branches of the municipal government in the French concession. At noon a tiffin will be given at the consulate to which the consular body and Chinese authorities have been invited. A review of the police of the French concession will be held at Koukaza Gardens at 5 o'clock and in the evening there will be a ball at the French Club. On Friday morning visits will be paid to Aurora University, Jeanne d'Arc College and the French Hospital, after which the governor-general will attend a tiffin arranged in his honor by local Chinese authorities. During the afternoon M. Merlin will visit Siccawei. M. Merlin and his party expect to leave Shanghai for Hongkong aboard the steamer Hakone Maru on Friday evening about 8 o'clock. At Hongkong M. Merlin will be the guest of Sir Reginald Stubbs, K.C.B., governor-general of Hongkong.

Sores from Wrist to Elbow
"Completely Healed"
Our portrait is of Mr. John Kidd, of 17, Mill Lane, Kilmarnock, Scotland, who writes:—"My right arm became covered with sores from wrist to elbow and was useless for over two years. I tried different ointments and so-called cures, but they never did me any good. Then I tried your 'Clarke's Blood Mixture,' and the sores soon began to heal up and power began to come back to my arm, so I persevered with the Mixture, and after having four bottles am glad to say my arm is completely healed up and I have now the full use of it." In a further letter over a twelvemonth later Mr. Kidd writes: "I have had no return of my complaint; my arm is still as sound as a bell and never troubles me in the least."

HEALTH PARADE AT HANGCHOW ON DRAGON BOAT DAY

Festival Is Occasion Of Intensive Sanitary Campaign

(China Press Correspondence)

Hangchow, June 10.—Taking advantage of the season of the Dragon Festival, which in the Chinese calendar is supposed to be general clean up season, the Young Men's Christian Association here staged a city-wide health drive last week. Over five hundred students and many of the local physicians co-operated in driving the message of better health across to the people of the city.

The main features of the campaign were a health exhibit which centered in the Y.M.C.A. building and a lantern parade. In connection with the exhibit were free physical examinations for all who would register. The parade was conducted by the Christian students union of the government and mission schools of the city, and was carried out by more than three hundred students, each of whom carried a huge model of fly, rat, or mosquito, or a lantern on which was inscribed a lesson of better health either in words or pictures. The parade marched through the main streets of the city and both finished off the health campaign with a noisy flourish and the celebration of the dragon festival with a worthwhile end.

This health campaign was the fifth held in Hangchow in as many years. Results of this sustained effort are visible in the growing sale of screens, the screening of food and fruit stalls along the streets and in shops, and the cleanliness of many places which heretofore have been breeding places for flies and other vermin which flurish in filth. There yet remains much to be done, but the people are no longer ignorant of the connection of disease epidemics and flies, mosquitoes and rats. The leaven is at least in the lump.

Another contributing feature to a cleaner city is the increase in the number of wide, well paved and drained streets which have been put in under the administration and interested attention of Governor Lu Yung-hsiang. Not only have these roads been built in the modern section of the city near the lake and beyond, but they are also breaking in and opening up the old city as well. These mean better lights, more air and cleanliness generally wherever they have gone, and property owners now gladly cooperate in efforts in this direction.

The development of modern roads is also reaching out into the province at large. The latest survey is from the Chien Tang river to Si Hsing and from there on to Shao Shing, which will give that important Fu city direct and quicker connection with Hangchow as well as a stimulus to trade and communication with the whole district round about. Governor Lu's office is also conducting a survey in the direction of Kiangsi with the thought of better connections with that province.

Carlton To Show Mary Pickford In Favorite Film Role

Seldom has there been shown such a marked interest in a forthcoming photoplay as that evinced by local theater-goers since the first announcement of the coming of Mary Pickford in her own and a new version of "Tess of the Storm Country" which will be the attraction at the Carlton theater beginning Sunday Matinee. It is perhaps the combination of a favorite star in a favorite play which makes this screen event so notable, but it is also certain that the fact that Miss Pickford has greatly elaborated on her triumphant histrionic efforts of eight years ago has had a marked effect in intensifying the public interest.

It is well known that this celebrated star has gone to a great expense in reproducing "Tess of the Storm Country" because of her ambition to improve upon it to such an extent as to insure its popularity in posterity. Critics throughout America agree she has succeeded in her purpose and it is freely predicted this great film drama will live as long as there is such a thing as a motion picture screen.

In this epochal photoplay she is surrounded by a supporting cast of exceptional brilliance. Lloyd Hughes in the leading male role, which was originally created by the late Harold Lockwood, and Gloria Hope as Teola Graves are especially good. David Torrence, Forrest Robinson, Danny Hoy, Jean Hersholt, Gus Saville and Madame de Bodamere also appear in the new film.

cards to everyone by 'boy' as it is common knowledge that you don't get in half the time even when the people you are calling upon are actually in. Such a plan would not work for long, however, as the door 'boys' have an awkward truthfullness in telling the lady of the house that you sent your card by a 'boy.' That stigma immediately removes you outside the pale!

The capital's social life, of course, centers about the Legations and it is said that when one receives an invitation to attend a Legation function it is to be taken as a social command. After enjoying the Schurman's hospitality I should say social commands are the easiest things to obey extant. And the French, Italian and Spanish Legations are famous for their wines. Who could resist with the present h. c. l. and impossibility of getting homeside champagne without ruining the family savings account?

Trippers of the light fantastic in Peking are not world's champions but the marvel of it all is that they dance as well as they do, rather than that they do not dance better. Outside of the Alkazar and the International cafes, which are outside the pale because they are the abode of 'vun small bottle please' expressions and expressionists there are only two places at which the public may dance. The Grand Hotel de Wagon Lits has a tea dance each afternoon except Thursday when four or five couples disport themselves. The Russian orchestra, however, has a standing (or rather a sitting!) rule against playing more than one tune every half hour. As a consequence the crowds are slim and confined almost entirely to tourists who seek relaxation from too many temples. On Thursday evenings the Wagon Lits holds a dinner dance that is quite popular.

The Grand Hotel de Pekin has a dance every evening. Pekingites, however, attend only on Saturday nights in any numbers. On other evenings one would think it were an exhibition by tourists. The floors at both hotels fall far short of dancing places in Shanghai and the orchestras are not to be mentioned in quite the same breath with the Carlton's, the Parisien's or the Astor's jazz bands.

And when they do dance Pekingese are under considerable of a handicap. One, to be polite and retain a stand-in with the powers that be, must dance with the dowagers despite their physical infirmities or natural inability to follow a tune—and one must dance with the Ministers, the Secretaries, the Chinese officials, etc., despite the fact that their feet are centuries behind their diplomatic brains. As a result it is only a matter of a short time until people who love dancing and can dance see a phantom sign reading: "Abandon hope all ye who enter here-" over every ball room. Within a short time their lazy minds and lazy feet make them as bad as the worst.

There are, nevertheless, several men and women, girls and boys, in Peking who compare most favorably with the queens and kings of the dance in Shanghai, two or three in mind having received their apprenticeship on Shanghai dancing floors. Shanghai, in Peking, is synonymous with dancing, and the good people of Peking, while admitting that Peking possesses most of the real culture and social grace of the Far East, also admit that Shanghai breeds the world's champion jazz-hounds.

COUNCIL BUYING NEW SITE FOR SLAUGHTER HOUSE

Purchase of a new slaughter house site, to cost Tls. 460,000, has been decided upon by the Municipal Council, according to today's Municipal Gazette. The purchase is made in view of the Electricity Department's program for taking over the site of the present slaughter house and it is stated that the new grounds, comprising mow 23.05, which has buildings upon it, are well situated, opposite the present cattle sheds, with a frontage on Dixwell and Sawgin Roads, convenient to the wharves and within easy access to the cattle siding of the Shanghai-Nanking Railway.

It is proposed to develop the site gradually, commencing with the construction of a modern slaughter house, to be followed subsequently by the erection of sheds for lairage of animals, while the present sheds will remain in use for lairage as long as desired. The property is mortgaged for Tls. 200,000, at 9 percent per annum and it has accordingly been agreed to purchase the property at Tls. 460,000, less Tls. 9,500, representing the difference between the interest payable for a period of 19 months and 6 percent, the rate of the Council's loan issue. The sum of Tls. 25,000 has been paid to the vendor and the mortgage was taken over on May 3. The property as at present developed produces a net annual income of Tls. 18,270.

COUNCIL GIVES CONDITIONS FOR SING-SONG HOUSES

Licencing conditions for sing song houses and sing song entertainers in the Settlement have been considered and approved by the Municipal Council; a fee of $10 quarterly for each house and $10 quarterly for each artiste—which accords with the Frenchtown regulations—being stipulated.

Among the license conditions are the following: free access to be given officers of the Council charged with inspection of such premises; no drunkenness or disorderly or immoral conduct to be permitted; no beating of gongs or other noises to be permitted to the annoyance of neighbors; no opium smoking or use of morphia, cocaine or other noxious drugs; that immediate notice of any death or crime on the premises be immediately given to the police; that no girls under fifteen be permitted to visit or frequent the premises and that only a licensed entertainer be permitted to entertain; that gambling be prohibited and that no liquor be sold or consumed except at regularly and proper meals.

Chinese Robber Of Foreign Homes Gets 5-Year Term

Tsz Chan-ling, Chinese burglar who during the past eight or nine months has looted many foreign residences in the Western district, drew a sentence of five years' imprisonment at the Mixed Court yesterday.

No less than fifteen separate charges were brought against the accused and at the conclusion of the case a warrant was ordered to issue for the arrest of Woo Dah-nyi, his partner in the various forays. Their method of entry to the homes robbed was to paste a piece of heavy paper on a window and then smash the glass, the pieces adhering to the paper and the break being effected with a minimum of noise.

Among the foreign homes robbed—of an aggregate of about $2,000 worth of property—were those of Messrs. A. E. Collins, 106 Avenue Road; M. Caudron, 140 Avenue Road; Sir Edward Pearce, 46 Hart Road; H. S. Hancock, 12 Ferry Road; J. Iwata, 63 Carter Road; H. V. Aldridge, 153 Sinza Road; C. B. W. Moore, 187 Sinza Road; W. Zalsman, 124 Sinza Road; W. Palmer, 156 Sinza Road; P. Birkayn, 126 Sinza Road; W. Figge, 71 Kiaochow Road.

Tsz was captured by police of West Hongkew station.

Colonel Shibuya, one of Japan's most brilliant staff officers, who has been Military Attache in Paris for a number of years, and is especially popular in French military circles, has just relinquished that appointment. In the talked-of Franco-Japanese agreement, he would constitute a most important link between the two General Staffs. Colonel Shibuya, it will be recalled, was chairman of the Commission which investigated the Janina affair.

Ex-Admiral Chan Chak returned to Hongkong from Shanghai, en route to Canton, by the President Jackson recently. In an interview he stated that there was no political significance to be attached to his return, which was due to family reasons. He stated that his present state of health, debarred him from entering the political arena for the present, but when he is fully recovered he would be quite prepared to serve the "Constitutionalist" cause again.

Dr. Pablo Sityar, a prominent Manila physician, was stabbed to death in his office, shortly before 6 o'clock on the evening of May 26. Three knife wounds caused the physician's death. One thrust of the knife went deep into the right side, another into his stomach and a third into the back. The attack must have been instantly overpowering because the consulting room, where the body was found, showed little signs of a violent struggle. Chairs were in order, medical instruments were in their accustomed places. Police believe the assailant was admitted as a patient—just before the close of the day's work.

Eric Liddell, a Tientsin lad, it is understood, although defeated in America, expressed himself highly gratified with the hospitable treatment he received. He attributes his defeat to the excellent training undergone by the American cracks, who were brought to the pink of perfection for the Penn State sports. He himself consistently declines to sacrifice his main object in life for the sake of athletic sport, which he regards as subsidiary. He is fitting himself, at the age of 22, for a missionary career, studying medicine as well as theology, and track running he regards as a sport and not a profession. At the same time, he is understood to cherish hopes of reversing the Pennsylvania result on the Olympic arena in Paris.

The Admiral Line steamer President Jefferson experienced three distinct earthquake shocks on the night of May 31, 175 miles from Yokohama, which made the steamer shiver from stem to stern and which are thought to have been from the same source as the quakes felt in Tokio the same evening. One of the officers aboard the steamer stated that the sensation was just as though the steamer had struck a mud bank and stopped dead still for an instant. "There was a shock just as though we had hit a mud bank," he said in describing the experience, "and then the steamer shivered as though it were being shaken from side to side. The two succeeding shocks were similar. The experience can best be compared to running aground, for the steamer jerked and then seemed to stop dead still for several seconds."

Chen Gives Views In Arsenal Sale

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Hongkong, June 10.—Mr. Eugene Chen has issued the following statement in regard to the explanation of the American Legation on the matter of the Canton Arsenal plant:

"If the American Legation would re-direct its attention to the communique, which was issued by my Government, it would see that the Arms Embargo Pact had been advisedly referred to as 'the so-called Arms Embargo Agreement' and that the communique concluded in a sense that the sale of arms and the plant by an American national in China would involve a breach of the pact by America, not as regards China, but only vis-a-vis other parties thereto. The suggestion that the pact is a self-denying ordinance is not in term of art in diplomacy."

Mr. Chen states that Dr. Sun Yat-sen wishes the matter settled on fair and just terms and that negotiations on this basis are proceeding with the vendors.

Japanese Baseball Team From Formosa To Meet Gallopers This Weekend

Visitors Arrived Yesterday And Had Preliminary Workout At Ball Park; More Members Needed For Baseball Club

By Westa

It looks like we are going to have some real baseball this weekend. The Japanese team from Formosa arrived yesterday and spent the afternoon working out at the Race Track. They look like real ball players. They are big chaps for the most part, and toss the ball around like big leaguers.

This afternoon at 5 o'clock the Formosans, who are known as the "Ento" team, will take on the M.B.K. nine for a practice game preparatory to the big matches Saturday and Sunday. The M.B.K.'s have a fairly good team this year and today's match should be interesting.

There will be no admission charge to the games Saturday and Sunday, but only members and their friends will be admitted to the stands.

In this connection manager Gallop and President McIntyre wish it stated that many more members are needed this year, and that membership cards will be available at the Secretary's office (in the baseball club's matshed) on both days.

The new stands, constructed entirely of lumber this year, are now completed and ready for use. Baseball fans will be able to watch the games in much more comfort this year than ever before, thanks to the efforts of the club officials in providing the new stands.

From present indications Shanghai is going to have a fine team this year. A large number of new men have shown up, among them Tavares, a Shanghai American School youth who gives promise of filling the long vacant gap behind the bat. In the practice games so far played he has shown wonderful form in all departments of the backstopping position. He receives with great skill and confidence, throws to bases well, and swings the old bludgeon with deadly execution.

Verne Claire, pitcher is rapidly rounding into form and should be a tremendous asset this season. He puts a flock of zip on the old pill and should win a lot of games.

The infield, with Kingman, Maloney, Thatch, Bullard, Howland, Insurance Smith and others available, looks very good, despite the absence of Freddy Bills. Bullard is a fine ball player and in the practice games so far played he has shown some classy stuff. Jerry Thatch also is playing great ball this spring and if the duties of the captaincy do not press down on him too heavily he ought to have his best season. Jerry has not picked out a permanent position for himself as yet, but he can play anywhere in the infield except first. As to first, Harry Kingman is taking care of that corner in rare style, as usual.

With a good team and good grounds and good opposition there is no reason why the season shouldn't be the best ever. All the boys need now is a little support.

BOX NG TONIGHT

Billy Tingle will meet Johnny Hill in the final of tonight's boxing card on the Carlton roof. Johnny Hill, it will be recalled, is the left handed Filipino who did battle with Syd Keenan some weeks ago. He is a fast scrapper; willing at all times to mix it, and packs a first class punch. On paper, it looks like a bang up battle.

A good preliminary card has been arranged, including a match between Benny Hertzberg and Kid Willie, and another between De La Cruz and Filipe Flores.

It is to be hoped that the managers will inject a little more action into the arrangements tonight, so that the customers can get away at a reasonable hour. Last week it was nearly one o'clock before the party was finished. The boys should be made to get ready, with their gloves on before they get in the ring. The fans do not care about sitting there while the seconds wrap tape around the boxers' hands, and then fit the gloves. Those details should be attended to beforehand. Many of the fans leave their womenfolk down stairs in the ball room while they are attending the bouts and they like to get back at a reasonable time. The boxing should be all over and finished by eleven or half past at the latest.

Big Negro Unable To Flatten "Unknown" In New York

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, June 10.—In spite of an advantage of 28 pounds and a longer reach, Harry Wills, the negro heavyweight boxer who has been clamoring to fight Dempsey, was unable to do more than beat Bartley Madden on points in a 15-round contest last night.

Wills battered the white man all over the ring, but had not a sufficient punch to knock him out. Madden fought back pluckily and in several rounds gave the negro as good as he got. The spectators wildly cheered Madden at the end of the bout.

NEW MAGISTRATE ROOTS OUT POPPY IN ANHWEI HSIEN

Hofei District Now Clear Of Opium Growing; Other Progress

(China Press Correspondence)

Hofei, Anhwei, June 7.—Last spring this entire hsien was covered with the opium poppy. The multi-colored poppy beds flourished within a li of the city wall and extended to the limits of the hsien. It was grown without any effort toward restriction. As reported last spring, over $200,000.00 in opium taxes were collected from the people. The price of opium was more than cut in half; the poorest could afford to smoke it.

This spring we are glad to report that the hsien has been entirely cleared of the poppy. Your correspondent has lately made a trip on foot covering over one hundred and fifty li to several parts of the hsien, and was unable to discover any trace of the poppy.

This task of preventing the raising of the opium has been most difficult and much credit is due to the local magistrate, Yuan Li-cheng, for the vigorous way in which he has carried it out. Last fall as soon as he arrived to take up his official duties proclamations were sent broadcast announcing that the raising of opium would be strictly forbidden. The farmers, however, planted their seed and very early this spring the young plants were to be found everywhere. The magistrate then personally led groups of soldiers into the country to pull out the young poppies. In several cases there were open conflicts with ignorant farmers who thus had their hopes of a spring crop destroyed. It is reported that on one such expedition several lives were lost. But on the whole the country people of this large hsien (county) are highly in favor of the Magistrate's attitude toward the opium. The International Anti-Opium Society has commended Magistrate Yuan for this splendid accomplishment.

Under the direction of this progressive official extensive improvements are taking place in the city. An electric light company has been formed, several units of the buildings have been completed, and the city will have electric lights by next November. Much needed repairs have been made on some of the large bridges and streets. At the suggestion of the local church he has also driven the public sing-song girls from the city. The better element of the city greatly hopes that Magistrate Yuan will be allowed to hold his office and not be removed as soon as his reforms are well under way.

Peking Celebrates Signing Of Treaty

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 7.—A reception was given in the Central Park yesterday to celebrate the conclusion of the Sino-Russian agreement, a group of members of Parliament being the promoters.

Mr. Wang Chia-hsiang, former Speaker of the Senate, who presided, made a speech speaking hopefully of the future effects of the agreement on the relations of the two countries.

Mr. Karakhan, in reply, spoke of the new spirit that was entering into the relations of the world.

Dr. C. T. Wang and other prominent speakers made appropriate addresses.

The reception was attended by several hundreds of people. A similar reception is being held this afternoon in the Law College of the Government University.

A Week In The White House With President Coolidge

By FRENCH STROTHER
(For World's Work)

The following is the third and last part of an article written after a brief but intense study of the President under exceptionally favorable circumstances.

During the seven days consumed in this study, the writer consciously avoided asking any question about the President of any person not in a position to speak from first-hand contact with him. The writer further insisted that the persons questioned should, in their replies, stick to facts that were of their own personal knowledge, or, where they gave impressions, that these should be their own personal impressions. The data for the character of President Coolidge is, therefore, as authentic as can be obtained; and, the writer believes, sufficiently varied in source and matter to give a secure foundation for the deductions which he draws from them. For these deductions the author, and he alone, is responsible.

Hours Of Ease At The White House

The President's hours of ease (such few as they are) come after he leaves the Executive Offices, at 5:30 or six in the evening, until he retires at about 10:30; and from 6:30 in the morning, when he arises, until he returns to his desk at the west end of the White House at nine. An hour for luncheon may sometimes be added to this picture, when he may share his simple noonday meal with family friends who are house guests, or with old-time neighbors from Massachusetts, who have called at his office during the morning to pay their respects. Oftener, however, luncheon is a business conference as well. This, indeed, is true of many dinners.

The President of the United States has a good deal of official entertaining to do, and the large formal dinners at the White House are as much a part of the day's work as the routine of his office. These formal gatherings need only be mentioned in passing, as they have no reference to Mr. Coolidge as distinguished from any other president, because their occurrence and details are formalities of official tradition and do not change from administration to administration.

The evenings at the White House which do bear the stamp of President Coolidge's individuality are those when only one or two guests are present and no official business is involved. These intimate evenings are almost as simple and informal as though they were in his former modest home at Northampton. The guests are nearly always invited verbally. The dinner hour is seven o'clock. The guest arrives at the main north entrance. The portico here and veranda are dimly lighted from above; a small group of reporters stand in the shadow of one of the towering Grecian columns that support the portico, waiting for the emergence of a public man known to be in conference with the President. Two policemen are on guard.

As the guest approaches the great glass doors, they are opened for him by an usher, who asks his name and has evidently been forewarned of his coming. The colored doorman, with a Virginian accent and idiom, smilingly asked if the guest will "rest yoh hat an' coat." Relieved of these, the guest is passed on to another usher, and by him into the Red Room to await the President's descent from the family quarters on the second floor. In a few minutes the slightly clanging sound of an elevator door floats in from the reception hall, and a moment later the President enters the Red Room, followed immediately by Mrs. Coolidge. His firm handshake is accompanied by a shy smile and a salutation, brief, but conveying in its intonation more of welcome than the printed words can convey. The words are: 'How do you do?" but the intonation is racy with the tang of New England—the last word rising abruptly in pitch above the three preceding and forming an almost staccato ending to a drawled beginning.

The visitor is at once introduced to Mrs. Coolidge. A more complete contrast between two people, both in appearance and manner, would be hard to imagine. The President's very fair complexion, with the red showing very plainly through (he abundantly freckles in summer); his blue-gray eyes; his thin, straight, and sandy hair; his prominent nose, and slightly rounded shoulders, are in direct contrast to the corresponding features of Mrs. Coolidge. Her complexion is olive; her eyes large and dark brown; her hair abundant, wavy, black just lightly powdered with gray, her nose has an almost jaunty tilt, and her carriage is easy and erect.

The mouths remain to be described. The President's is most unusual, seeming to be divided laterally into thirds. The central section is a straight horizontal line, flanked on either side by a drop at a sharp angle of almost forty-five degrees to the corners. The upper lip is fairly full; the lower so thin that it shows no red at all when the mouth is closed. Mrs. Coolidge's mouth is wide, the lips full, and like her dancing eyes, expresses instantly her rapid shift from mood to mood. Strangely enough, in view of the popular conception of their characters, it is the President, and not Mrs. Coolidge, who has a dimple in the point of the chin. The impression of the two together is that the President is a nervously alert man, constantly under the perfect control of a firm will, and that Mrs. Coolidge "hasn't a nerve in her body." and therefore gives rein to the graceful vivacity of movement characteristic of a woman in perfect health and full of the joy of living.

The party moves at once to the dining room. It would be hard to find a man of simpler habits than the President, but he evidently feels the obligation to preserve the tradition of official etiquette, so that he is punctilious in following the prescribed rules of precedence inherited from generations of his predecessors. At the door of the great paneled dining room, Rob Roy, the big, pure white collie from Wisconsin, comes bounding across the room to greet him. The President's face lights with pleasure, and he returns the salutation with affectionate pats and "good doggie." After this exchange of greetings, the President leads Rob Roy to the fireplace to "charge" on the hearth, while the dinner is in progress. The meal itself is of the simplest—a clear soup, a cutlet with string beans and potatoes, tomato salad, ice cream, cake, and coffee.

DINNER TABLE TALK

The conversation is about anything and everything except the President's work. Never since her marriage has Mrs. Coolidge discussed his business with her husband. I venture to surmise that she adopted this practice deliberately for his sake. Few men concentrate so intensely upon their work as the President and this has been his habit since boyhood. Mrs. Coolidge must have felt that her duty as his wife was to make home an absolute refuge from this intense preoccupation. She is as conspicuously a "social being" as her husband is not. Lively spirits, an irrepressible instinct for fun, a gift for ready and entertaining conversation, warmth of feeling and the capacity to express it—these are qualities universally attributed to her, and verified upon the most casual meeting. They cannot but be a relief and solace to her silent companion, who has always lived a life of intense intellectual activity, accompanied by the emotional strain peculiar to men of strong feeling, held in constant repression.

Mrs. Coolidge and the guest do most of the talking, the President supplying an occasional comment—here a fact needed to complete a sentence of his wife's, there a question of anxious concern about her welfare when she describes a slight accident to herself, and again a humorous, sometimes quizzical, commentary upon a bit of her narrative. Thus his characterisation of Paul Pry, the other favorite dog at the White House—an Airedale, for the moment out of the family's good graces for overboisterous conduct, but evidently on his way back into them. The President's eyes twinkle and he volunteers that the Airedale is "a great boxer"; and imitates Paul Pry's habit of play with gestures (something, by the way, which the President rarely uses), and excuses Paul Pry's misbehavior on the ground that he has "found the responsibilities of public office too much for him."

The conversation drifts around to the boys, who are away at school and keenly missed. Mrs. Coolidge remarks that it has been two years since the boys were with them except for vacations, and the President, with a characteristic instinct for exactness, corrects the figure to "three years." Wonders of radio are discussed, and some one remarks that an expert has said that the President has an unusually good radio voice, that is—the speaker gropes for the technical phrase. The President supplies it: it is "cuts through."

As dessert time approaches, Rob Roy slips from the hearthstone to the President's side, to remind him that he expects his customary share in the meal at this point; and the President sends the butler for the dog's regular evening allotment of sweetmeats. Dinner over, the party adjourns upstairs, Rob Roy occupying the seat in the elevator and accompanying Mrs. Coolidge to the library, while the President adjourns to the study for a cigar and a glance at the news of the day.

The study is a very cheerful room. The big fireplace, the easy chairs, the walls crowded with paintings of American historical events and characters, an enormous desk covered with books, papers, and magazines, flanked at the right by a silken American flag and at the left by the President's standard—the room is really gay with color and warmth. The news is provided for the President in this way: The principal American newspapers are carefully scanned by members of the secretarial staff and all news of interest to the President is clipped and pasted on uniform large sheets of yellow paper. All the clippings on a particular subject are put together and the sheets fastened at the corner with a clasp. By this device the President can in a few moments get a quick picture of newspaper opinion on any particular subject as reflected in headlines, news articles, and editorial comment.

The President's only use of tobacco is an occasional cigar, smoked deliberately and with evident relish, and firmly set at a somewhat defiant upward angle in the right-hand corner of his mouth. After sharing his unique newspaper with the guest for ten minutes, the President suggests a visit to the studio across the hall—the boys' bedroom temporarily cleared of furniture and made into a workroom where Howard Chandler Christy has been painting the President's portrait and two portraits of Mrs. Coolidge. Crossing the hall, the President's Lincoln Day speech at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York is mentioned—at the largest political dinner ever given in America, where 2,034 guests were seated, and sixteen hundred more were turned away for want of room.

The President remarks: "I don't see why they should want to hear me!"

The guest dissents, and the President adds: "Did you ever hear President Harding speak? He was a great speaker! I don't speak well."

To the guest's rejoinder that an audience enjoys a graceful delivery but that the substance of a speech is the real thing after all, the President concurs with: "That's the only thing that lasts."

It may here be interpolated that the President has few vanities; but he is not without them. One is his style in writing—a conscious use of short, crisp, pointed, declarative sentences, in which he takes great pride.

The way to the study leads past a handsome bit of up-to-the-minute furniture. "That's our radio set. I don't like radio."

In the "studio," the President calls attention first to two portraits of Mrs. Coolidge, plainly eager to share his appreciation of the artist's skill and his pride in the faithful reproduction of the likeness of his handsome wife. After full justice has been done to the paintings of Mrs. Coolidge: "That's the one of me." A discussion of the likeness follows, the guest doing all the discussing, but the President quietly taking a position alongside the portrait so that copy and original may be compared.

The scene shifts to the library, where a member of the staff has produced for Mrs. Coolidge's inspection some old photographs of the interior of the White House before it was altered under the Roosevelt regime. There are dozens of these pictures. The President examines them closely and with occasional amusement at antiquities of dress and furnishings in some of them. Four pictures engage the President's attention longer than the others. Of these, two are photographs in which children and animals are the center of interest. The third is of a stairway which was removed when the dining room was enlarged to its present proportions. Its interest seems to lie in the challenge to the mind to work out the problem of how the change was made to acquire the additional space. The fourth picture, the most pondered of the four, is of an office with several men working at desks, in a room which is now a part of the living quarters, but was then one of the executive offices. Its appeal may have lain in its evidences of order and application to work—distinctive characteristics of the President himself.

The books at the White House are a casual miscellany. The President does not read general literature either for pleasure or cultural development. As a young man he liked fiction and read a little. He liked poetry, especially the New England poets, and read them a good deal. But since he first began the practice of law in Northampton, his whole thought has been of his work. In his own language, "When I was a lawyer, my nose was always in a law book: and when I got into public life, I had to read public documents to keep up with my work." It may be doubted whether, from a young man to the present, the President has read more than a few works of general literature, or in any books outside the the field of history, economics, and biography, these being directly related to his public service.

The President has no recreations of the usual kind. He does not play cards or other games that while the time away.

WHEN BUSINESS IS BARRED

It was suggested at the beginning of this article, that his hours of ease are "such as they are." All too often his evenings are interrupted two or three times by the advent of callers upon emergency business. Their resort is the study; and in its evening quiet, many of the President's most important official words and deeds are uttered and done.

Such hours of ease as he now has—all too broken—are devoted wholly to the companionship of his wife and friends. Mrs. Coolidge, by nature and by choice, makes these hours as different as can be from the strain of the day. Naturally vivacious and fun-loving, she has, besides, a quite exceptional social gift and a fine mind, both of which have been educated by experience, wide reading, and abundant social life, so that the atmosphere into which the President relaxes from his day's work is one of sunny warmth, agreeable and intelligent conversation, and a homelike naturalness of spirit that conform perfectly with his own simplicity of character.

The President's habits of repose are based upon the sound old maxim, "Early to bed, early to rise." Nothing is allowed to interfere with this part of his daily regimen; and to this severe regularity of sleep his constant good health may be in part ascribed. At a quarter past ten, the guest is conscious that the President is growing sleepy. To intimate that he is aware of the President's habits, he professes an ignorance of the White House etiquette of departure, which is briefly explained and the conversation continues. In a few moments the President declares it is time for him to go to bed. The guest rises, but realizes that the President should indicate his wishes by rising first, so resumes his seat. The President's eye twinkles a humorous, silent signal of sympathetic comprehension, and a moment later he rises, and the guest follows suit. The adieux are made, and the guest departs into the night. Fifteen minutes later, the President is sound asleep.

He awakens at 6:30, and by 7:15 is ready for his customary before-breakfast walk. Nothing but the severest weather is allowed to interfere with this routine. We leave the White House just as the sun is showing over the eastern horizon.

"Fine morning," is the salutation.

The first block is walked in silence, and in the guest's struggle to catch the President's gait. Old friends have failed at this after years of effort, and have given up trying. The guest scores an achievement by finally getting into step. The President's gait is as distinctive as any of his characteristics. It is impossible to describe it except by explaining to the reader a method by which he cannot help imitating it. Mark two lines, fifteen feet apart, on the sidewalk and practice walking the distance between them rapidly in such a way that you cover the fifteen feet in exactly eight steps. You will find that the steps are so short that, to take them rapidly, you have to assume an ususual carriage, which will thereafter explain the standing pose of the President which you may remark in any full-length photograph of him.

The President is followed at five paces by two secret service men. All Presidents have found this practice distasteful, but it is demanded by public opinion, and is invariably followed. The President's route varies from day to day. One morning it will be through the shopping district, where he inspects the show windows; another, down the Mall, through lawns and trees; another, as this particular morning, through the better residential section. But, whatever district he visits on his walks, the President tends to "circle left," although this is not an invariable habit.

As the walk processes, the President points out houses of especial interest, and at every turn names to his companion the new street on to which the route emerges. There is more conversation than the night before: partly because the President's mind has not yet become absorbed in the concerns of the day, and partly because the guest has a better idea of the subjects that interest him. An inquiry regarding his son's ambitions brings out that John's first idea was to be a motorman, a calling promptly changed, after his first experience on a railroad train, to that of locomotive engineer. Calvin, the younger, had an ambition to run a store, "so he could have a big house in Boston." The President's own first ambition was to be a storekeeper:

"Though I didn't have as good a reason for it as Calvin; I just wanted to run a store because my father did."

At this early hour of the morning, few pepole are abroad. Most of the passers-by recognize the President and raise their hats in salutation, which he invariably returns with a hearty "good-morning." A colored man passes and is greeted. The President explains: "He takes care of the kennels at the White House." Another man passes. The President smiles: "That's Mr. Blank—he costs me a lot of money."

"How is that?" queries his companion.

"Sells women's fixin's."

Some of the President's observations are colored with intentional mispronunciations, for humorous purposes: "This is Con-nect-i cut Avenue," "That's the Pres-buy-terian Church," and the like.

His companion mentions the popularity of the poet Longfellow in England, and the President observes: "Mr. Longfellow was a very cultivated poet. He had many advantages—education, means, travel. But I think Mr. Whittier had more natural talent."

His fellow pedestrian remarks the extraordinary coincidence of the appearance, at one time and in one small community, of five writers of the quality of Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes, Emerson, and Alcott.

"And Mr. Lowell," adds the President.

"Yes, his 'Vision of Sir Launfal' is a fine poem."

The President concurs, but adds: "His 'Commemoration Ode' is very fine." (A pause.) "But he was wrong in one thing: Lincoln wasn't the first American."

"You mean in the sense of not the first man of the distinctively American type?"

"Yes."

"Who would you say was?"

"Washington. He fixed the type."

"Which would you say was the greater man?"

"It's pretty hard to compare them."

Silence for half a block—mistakenly interpreted by his companion as the conclusion of that subject. But the President for once initiates the conversation; evidently he has been pondering the question.

"'Should say Washington was the better judge of a man; Lincoln was the better judge of men."

"You mean that Washington was the better judge of the particular man to fit the particular job?"

"Yes." (A pause.) "I have never heard of another man like Washington in history: he never made a single mistake in judgment. At least so far as I have read."

"And you mean that Lincoln was the better judge of the mind and heart of the common mass of men?"

"Why shouldn't he be? He grew up among 'em. Lincoln was a jury lawyer; he rode the circuits; he had to know people, because he had to persuade them."

The door of the White House has been reached.

"Glad to have seen you again. Good-by."

Two observations complete the picture of the walk: First, the President has never carried a cane. Second, at every street crossing, he pauses at the curb, gives a quick but careful look up the street to the left, and down the street to the right, appraising the speed and distance of approaching vehicles. Then, when he starts across, he does not alter his pace, however close the vehicle may seem to be upon him. His calculation has been exact, and whatever its speed, it is never nearer him than fifteen feet when he has passed its path. A minute detail, but significant, like dozens of others that could be cited to illustrate his habit to exact observation and accurate calculation in every action of his life.

RUBBER PRODUCTS THAT ARE UNIFORMLY GOOD
A little over 15 years ago the United States Rubber Company started their own rubber plantations in Sumatra and the Malay Peninsula. They did this that they might always be certain of securing crude rubber unvarying in quality.
Today the United States Rubber Company owns 172 square miles of rubber plantations and 5,000,000 carefully selected rubber trees under the constant care and supervision of a corps of tree experts.
Recently this company announced two revolutionary advances in the art of rubber manufacture: The New Sprayed Rubber and The New Web Cord.
The first of these ensures your getting rubber articles made from the purest virgin rubber ever produced. A rubber with all its natural properties unimpaired by the addition of smoke residues and chemicals. The second advance means a cord tire of a quality even more consistent than ever before.
United States Rubber products always have been leaders in the rubber industry. Now—due to these two startling discoveries, you can be assured of rubber products that are more than ever uniformly good.

GROWING CALL IN JAPAN FOR WOOL HELD ENCOURAGING

Growers In China Spurred By Demand

USE INCREASES

Imports From China And Australia Expand

The increasing demand for wool by Japan is giving encouragement to the wool growers of China and other Asiatic countries. The value of wool imports into Japan increased from Y.38,644,849 in 1913 to Y.154,498,629 in 1922. The increasing use of wool by Japan is one of the outstanding features of the present trade development of that country, and is a trend that is watched with interest in the wool-producing centers of the Asiatic mainland.

Even before the war Japan was taking 10,000,000 pounds of raw wool annually. Of this total the Australian market supplied over 80 percent, the rest being furnished principally by China and Great Britain. Due to a large Russian request for its fabric in 1915, Japan increased enormously its wool imports from China and Australia.

When the British Government took over the Australian clip in the fall of 1916, the Japanese turned to South Africa and South America. Imports from Africa increased within a year from 16,000,000 pounds to 21,187,000 pounds and those from the Argentine also increased, though not so spectacularly.

Annual wool purchases continued around 50,000,000 pounds until 1920, when Japan entered the South African field alone for 48,900,000 pounds, bringing the total for that year to almost 71,000,000 pounds. This "coup" threw the African market into confusion and prices advanced to extreme figures, according to "Commerce Monthly."

BUYS IN AUSTRALIA

The next year Japan did the bulk of her greatly reduced buying in Australia, causing no particular stir in international wool markets. In 1922 Japan again startled the trade by taking large quantities of choice staple in the Australian market, amounting to about 80 percent of the total of Japanese imports of raw wool.

How important a factor wool has become in the economy of Japan is revealed by the fact that during 1923 wool and woollen yarns combined were the second largest item, measured value-wise, in the import schedule, and were materially larger than iron and steel imports.

A late trade directory lists thirty-five woollen mills in Japan, some of them capitalised for large amounts. The Japan Woollen Textile Co., Ltd., of Kobe, has a capital of Y.20,000,000, of which Y.15,000,000 is paid up. The Japan Woollen Co., Ltd., is operated on a capital of Y.10,000,000. Two or three mills have a capital of Y. 2,000,000 or more, and five or six concerns are capitalised for Y.1,000,000 or more.

The rapid expansion of the wool-manufacturing industry at home and a slight quantitative increase in the export trade in woollen textiles in contrast to the present slackness in the silk piece goods trade, seems to indicate that wool manufacturing in Japan may merit in the future some of the interest so long accorded to the silk textile industry.

CAUSE OF DEMAND

The demand for woollen fabrics in Japan arose from the contact with western civilisation at the beginning of the Meiji era (1868). With the progress of western ideas and institutions, there developed an allied taste for Occidental dress, manifested in a growing tendency toward the adoption of woollen garments in the Orient and even in semi-tropical countries. Japan is a striking exemplification of this process. Despite the rapid growth in consumption of woollen textiles, the Japanese output, which at the start played a role supplementary to the fabrics imported, now supplies the major part of domestic requirements.

While most of Japan's woollen products was absorbed at home, even before the world war this country, the pre-eminent silk producer, was exporting small quantities of woollen and worsted yarns to Oriental markets. Although the product of its spinning mills enjoyed a remarkable foreign demand during the war, export increasing nearly 400 percent between 1913 and 1917, the actual quantities never amounted to as much as a million pounds and were still confined to Eastern markets. In 1915, Japan was credited with 210,000 spindles whereas in 1921 there were 346,107 spindles installed, revealing in a striking way the expansion of the yarn-spinning branch of the industry.

Little Change In Level Of Cotton Prices In U. S.

(Reuter's American Service)

New York, May 9.—Little real change in the level of cotton prices has been seen this week. Nothing developed in the weather or crop situation, nor in the mill outlook to affect sentiment materially one way or the other and the market is practically marking time pending more definite news from the belt. Taking the week's news as a whole, it would probably be safe to say that trade opinion is rather optimistic as to the crop position in the Atlantic States taking into account the increased acreage and use of fertiliser.

At the same time, fearful lest the farming element in the South may have become too optimistic over crop conditions, especially with reference to the weevil, the laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture at Tallulah, Louisiana, warns that enough weevils have survived the winter to do serious damage to the crop if weather conditions are favorable for their development and spread.

It says the indications are that the percentage of weevils emerging this year is greater than was the case in either 1918 or 1919 and approaches closely that of 1917 and 1920.

COTTON LOSSES

The records compiled by the Government show losses in pounds per acre from insects and other causes during these years to be as follows:

	Insects	Other causes	Total
1920	73.5	96.2	169.7
1919	56.4	69.4	125.8
1918	23.5	97.9	121.4
1917	35.7	90.9	126.6

Looking ahead towards price possibilities for the coming season a local house points out that the European problem is likely to be settled this summer, and that the enormous financial resources of the United States will become available, through international banking channels, for pushing business between this country and Europe on a more liberal credit basis than has been possible for many years; and it is self evident that the takings of American cotton would commence to increase almost immediately, competing with American mills for the early receipts and that therefore even a fairly large crop would be readily absorbed at full prices.

The above house points out that the price equivalents under the prospective world conditions and the ability of the farmers to resist any great decline, would seem to be about as follows:

"A very large crop, say about like 1911 or 1914, a decline of a few cents, but probably strongly contested. A fairly large crop, say 20 percent more than 1923, present prices would seem reasonably cheap. A crop about like 1923, 'the sky the limit.'"

A BULLISH VIEW

One of the local students of crop and market affairs takes rather a bullish view of the situation, claiming that however brilliant the crop promise may seem during May, June and early July, the probabilities are still enormously on the side of such losses from boll weevil in late July, August and early September that the average yield per acre will prove to be below rather than above 140 pounds of lint cotton, which would mean a crop barely 11,500,000 bales, a quantity altogether insufficient to give the world a comfortable supply of American cotton for the coming year.

Meantime cotton goods merchants are continuing their policy of purchasing only for immediate needs, and many observers believe that the present policy of conservative buying will develop into a fixed method of trading. It is said that some cloth is being sold, though at prices entailing severe losses to spinners, and that many mills now running are doing so at the expense of piling up unsold goods, hoping that curtailment elsewhere may deplete supplies enough to help them out later on by having some goods on hand. However, some of them are meeting with strong opposition to such a course from banking interests who are refusing further credits.

Exports keep up remarkably well, aggregating 5,119,000 bales so far this season, against 4,342,000 the same time a year ago. It is understood that foreign spinners, being short of stocks, have been good buyers of new crop for early October shipment.

"About five years ago I was very much run-down and suffered from violent headaches, says Mrs. A. B. Perera, Municipal Health Visitor, of Slave Island ward, Colombo, Ceylon. "My appetite was poor, I hardly ever enjoyed a good night's sleep and became extremely nervous and weak.

"Alarmed at my condition my husband insisted upon me having medical attention but the medicines prescribed failed to do me any good, in fact I appeared to get weaker. Then I made up my mind to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and it gives me pleasure to say that I have never regretted having done so, for now I sleep well, eat better than I have ever done before and enjoy the very best of health. As for the headaches and the feeling of utter helplessness that I experienced before, they are things of the past. I certainly can recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Equally helpful for men and women, for more than five-and-thirty years Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have been world-famous as a remedy for anaemia, nervous debility, indigestion, rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, neuritis and other maladies arising from watery impure blood or disordered nerves. Calendar Desk Pad Fed From Paper Roll.

Equipped with a roll of paper like that used with an adding or calculating machine, a handy desk pad recently placed on the market enables the user to record data, from day to day, on a continuous sheet of paper, much as stock quotations are recorded on ticker tapes.

The base of the calendar has a bronze finish.

When the exposed surface of the paper has been used up, the new surface is advanced by pulling on the end of the roll. The paper can then be torn off or left as a continuous record.

A permanent calendar attached in front of the roll can be used indefinitely.

MAKING EFFORTS TO SALVAGE THE RUBBER TRADE

U. S. Government Diligently Engaged In Collecting Useful Data

Details will be announced shortly, writes a Stock Exchange correspondent of the "Economist," of one more effort that is to be made with a view to "saving the rubber industry. It seems to owe inspiration, at least in part, to the recent activity of the Commission appointed by the U.S. Government, with power to spend $500,000, and which has been diligently collecting exhaustive data with regard to the whole industry of rubber-growing. Besides this incentive, however, the sellers of rubber have also had to face a long-continued dwindling, by eighths of a penny at a time, in the price of the produce. Shareholders have exercised unusual patience. The invitation towards yet another reform has come mainly from within the trade, and half a dozen schemes have been but lately examined by people belonging to inner circles that are not satisfied with prevailing conditions.

GOLD VERSUS RUBBER

As is generally known, there exist groups of rubber companies, acknowledging one direction by particular houses, in much the same way as South African mining concerns are frequently controlled by the "shops," colloquially named. But whereas gold can always be sold, rubber, on the other hand, may become a drug in the market. This factor brings down the price, by reason of sales at competitive rates, on behalf of producers; some of them acting under restriction, some of them free, some of them private owners, and others unscrupulously extravagant in their output. At home, jealousy and suspicion have thwarted, time and time again, the efforts of wellmeaning reformers who have labored to reconcile the clash of jarring personal interests. Bitter adversity went some way towards helping to bring about consent to a restriction scheme, but the old trouble still rankles, and the task of uniting the sellers, as the buyers are united, would appear to be hopeless as it is essential.

Nobody has the courage to strike at the real root of the trouble; nobody dares to risk the certain failure which would attend the only scheme that promises success to the industry as a whole, at the expense of vested interests, jealously guarded and closely preserved. Agents for rubber-producing companies possess means of profit other than those of commission and brokerage upon the sale of the output. The companies require stores, machinery, insurance, freight, a score of other things, in the supply of which it would be surprising and unbusinesslike, if agents were to find no source of profit. To throw the selling of all rubber into one set of hands, presents difficulties that will leap at once to the eye of an imagination which realises the quick fear of one company, or group, lest another may obtain more favorable treatment than is accorded to itself.

A PROPITIOUS TIME

Central selling might easily prove the first step towards a demand on the part of rubber shareholders for the same principle to be applied to other branches of the industry, such as those already enumerated. Amongst the schemes under present discussion, that proposal has the best chance of general acceptance which, while avoiding the dangerous ground of interference with special interests, will throw a gloss of unity over the sellers. That the present time for action is propitious may be willingly conceded. The American users are uneasy at their unofficial ring of rubber-buyers standing in danger of being deemed an association acting in restraint of trade. This is why they sent over to Europe and the Middle East the Rubber Commission that has lately returned to them. If the rubber sellers cannot—for reasons which shareholders may learn without enthusiasm—agree to the principle of fusion of interests for the common-good, then some line of least resistance to the objections may yet be found before it is too late. It is to be hoped that the new movement will be managed by men of experience, freshness of ideas, and superiority to hidebound prejudice, otherwise it will be doomed to disappoint the mild optimism that is ready to attend its advent.

The Anti-American Demonstrations In Japan

IN view of the fact that the State Department has handed to Mr. Hanihara, Japanese Ambassador in Washington, a reply to the Japanese protest against the exclusion clause in the Immigration Law—a reply which, according to preliminary report, "is a model of courtesy and tactfulness and intended to assuage Japanese susceptibilities," it is to be hoped that the unfortunate anti-American demonstrations which have been taking place in Tokio will be discontinued. All good Americans, we believe, feel that the matter of preventing the immigration of Japanese laborers into the United States might have been handled in a more diplomatic manner, which, while accomplishing the same ends, might have at the same time saved Japan's "face." But after all, when it is considered that America had already barred Chinese and Indian coolie immigrants, there was no other just course open from the standpoint of absolute fairness to all citizens and subjects of Oriental nations.

Under the new Immigration Law, the Japanese student, merchant or traveler is free to go to America as often and remain as long as he wishes; it is only the laborer or agriculturalist who is not free to go, and henceforth these classes will be barred from emigrating to the United States just as strictly as Japan herself bars the immigration into her country of Chinese laborers or farmers. Japan has never granted the right to China to send coolies into Japan to compete with Japanese labor, hence after consideration of the question, we believe that the calm and sober judgment of the leaders of Japan will prevail and that the radical elements which are now trying to cause trouble over the American Immigration Law will find that they do not have the backing of the thinking elements in the country.

There is one element in Japan, however, which will seek to benefit by the agitation, and that is the powerful military clan. It may have been a pure coincidence, but nevertheless it was quite interesting to observe that Reuter's Pacific Service for June 8 carried two important dispatches under a Tokio date line, one of which told of the anti-American demonstration in Tokio and of a possible boycott against American goods and the other dispatch quoted General Yamanashi, former Minister of War, as saying that "There is nothing in the trend of world affairs to indicate that military retrenchment is anything but idle talk, and it would appear that the real reduction of military forces is not at the present time a practicable proposal. America, though democratic in her form of government, is extremely nationalistic in her actions. While some of her leaders are advocating further armament limitation and would like to see the military strength of the Powers curtailed, the advantage of citizen training camps is not lost sight of and efforts are being made to spread a knowledge of military principles among the people in general."

This interview, it is interesting to note, was given out on the eve of a formation of a new Government following the recent elections and was frankly intended as advice to the new Government, "whatever the complexion of the Ministry that may come into power in succession to the present Government." Continuing along these lines, General Yamanashi said:

"Japan, too, should see to it that military retrenchment and the consequent loss of efficiency in one direction should find some compensation in another, and it is with that in view that the war department chiefs mean to push their idea of revising the national system of education along military lines."

It is but natural that the Japanese military leaders should take advantage of the present anti-American feeling resulting from the passage of the U. S. Immigration Law to push their own game. The same thing is done all over the world. It is quite possible that Ambassador Hanihara's threat of "grave consequences" in his note to Secretary Hughes protesting against the action of Congress in passing the Japanese exclusion clause was of considerable help in getting through the U. S. Naval budget this year—which budget incidentally failed of passage because of a filibuster in the Senate just before adjournment last week.

So outside of the propaganda of those who may wish to take advantage of the temporarily ruffled relations of America and Japan on account of the Immigration Law, we do not believe that any untoward results are likely to follow, nor do we believe that there is going to eventuate any serious boycott of American products in Japan. A boycott is a two-edged weapon and Japan's economic prosperity is too closely bound up with the American markets for the Japanese Government to permit its radical elements to start a boycott movement or even permit any serious anti-American movement to gain any great headway.

We believe that after Secretary Hughes' reply to the Japanese protest has been read and pondered upon the thinking leaders of Japan will come to see the American viewpoint on this question, will realise that immigration is a domestic issue for any sovereign country to settle for itself. The methods which Congress employed in the adoption of the Immigration Law are not above criticism and have been just as soundly criticised in America as they have been in Japan, but now that the law has been adopted, the anti-Japanese sentiment on the Pacific Coast is certain to die down and in the long run Japanese-American relations should improve.

The French Political Crisis

NOTHING but sympathy will be felt for the French nation in the political crisis through which it is at present passing, a crisis of the first magnitude. Following the recent general elections in France, in which the Left was returned into a position of eminence, the attack which had been originally carried out upon the former Premier was continued upon M. Millerand, the President, it being alleged against him that he had more or less departed from the neutrality entailed upon him by his office, in favor of the Right. Probably the most serious aspect of that attack was the decision of M. Herriot, who was logically the next Premier, to decline the invitation to form a Cabinet. M. Millerand thereupon decided to invite M. Marsal to form what may be termed a make-shift Cabinet for the purpose of carrying on the Government, and to enable Parliament to pronounce itself constitutionally. There does not at any time appear to have been any design that this new creation should continue in office for any length of time, and, in support of this conclusion, there is the fact that M. Marsal and his colleagues put forward no suggested program. Indeed M. Millerand's position, itself, appears to have been that should the result of certain constitutional proceedings indicate a strong desire that he should retire from the Presidency, namely if Parliament constitutionally declared itself in favor of that move, he would do so.

The Left took another view of the subject. It declined to form a Cabinet unless M. Millerand immediately relinquished office, and at the same time decided that it would employ its strength against any other Government which attempted to carry on in its place. By a majority of 115 in the Chamber of Deputies, it decided not to enter into relations with a Ministry which, by its composition, was a negation of the rights of Parliament. And by the term "rights of Parliament" in this connection, it is to be believed that it meant the right of the numerically stronger party to form a Ministry, or, in other words, a vindication of the principle of "to the victors the spoils." At the same time, however, it goes a step farther in enunciating the contention that because the incumbent of the presidency is persona non grata with the party actually in power, despite the fact that he is elected for a term of years, it may, by a suspension of the functions of government, force him from power. If we were to seek an analogy, it might be seen in a Republican majority in the American legislature refusing to accept office while a Democratic President completed his term of office, and at the same time refused to allow any other Ministry to proceed with the government of the country. In both cases, it would appear that the situation would be highly unconstitutional, and subject the Presidents of both countries to political influences of a wholly undesirable nature. For instance, we might find the Left electing a new President, being thereafter defeated at the polls, before his term of office was completed, and a Right majority refusing to permit the government of the country to continue, until a man of their own choice had been appointed to the supreme position in the land. That may or may not be a desirable state of affairs.

There certainly seems ground for the contention of the President that the action of the Left is unconstitutional, and it may be an argument to be used by its opponents, that the Left has no right to suspend the government of the country for any such reason in view of the explicit provisions of the Constitution. But whether it be right or wrong, an important precedent is being established. It may mean in the future that a President's term of office, instead of being a definite period, will last no longer than the power of any one particular party to keep him in office, and, in any event, means that the tightest drawn constitutions can sometimes be modified in other ways than those originally laid down.

Misuse Of Monuments

IT is too much to expect untutored persons in the lowest scale of Shanghai humanity to look upon memorials for the dead with a feeling of reverence; thus it comes to pass that the only thing which attracts the daily crowds of loiterers to the vicinity of the Memorial is that faculty for inquisitiveness which is one of the strongest characteristics of those who have nothing to do, and do it in such places as the base of the War Memorial, the facade of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank where the two lions are daily patted on their paws and other spots where the not too overworked Chinese passerby is wont to linger. The writer often has occasion to pass the War Memorial, and the unedifying spectacle is forced upon him gaze of professional loafers, in various stages of idleness, meandering about the base of the Memorial, from which point of vantage it is their custom to admire the surrounding landscape. Of course, policemen are about, but not being equipped with eyes at the back of their heads, the aforesaid loiterers sometimes seize the opportunity surreptitiously to indulge in habits contrary to all known laws of hygiene—habits which are particularly obnoxious and a sacrilege in the neighborhood of the War Memorial.

The subject of the War Memorial has been suggested by an incident which has just occurred in Hongkong which is too good to pass unnoticed. As the authorities there for a long time had taken no steps to remedy the disgraceful misuse of the Wanchai Monument, British and American sailors took matters into their own hands the other evening, and, with picks and shovels, succeeded in clearing the site in about an hour. This startling development commenced at about 11.30 p.m., when the party, about eighteen strong, broke up a Chinese meeting that was being held, explained matters to the crowd, who went away in an orderly enough manner, and then set to work. In a very short time, hundreds of Chinese were looking on, and four Sikh policemen held the huge crowd back whilst the sailors were at work. The "fatigue party," as they facetiously called themselves, went to work with a will. Big logs of wood found on the spot were placed across the road, and the stones and rubble were taken into a side street and neatly levelled down. The monument was then thoroughly washed down with water, and wreaths were placed on it.

It may be mentioned for the information of those who have never been in Hongkong that the Wanchai Monument was erected in memory of British and American sailors who fell in action against Chinese pirates in 1885. The men killed were members of the crews of the U. S. steam-frigate Powhatan and the British steam-sloop Rattler. They routed out a nest of pirates near Kulan, on the Canton River, and attacked with great success, over 200 guns being seized from the pirates, who were about 1,000 strong and of whom 500 were killed. In addition to the nine officers and men from the British and American boats who were killed, 20 others, including two officers, were wounded. In March last the Hongkong Telegraph drew attention to the shameful misuse of this monument as a dumping ground for all kinds of rubbish, building material and Chinese workmen's implements and published photographs of the monument and its unkempt surroundings.

Another Discovery

WE have no doubt that many will have read the telegram appearing in our issue of yesterday, announcing the isolation of the cancer germ, and the prosecution of investigations which may ultimately lead to the discovery of a certain cure for this dread affliction. For cancer is now so common that many have come to look upon it as a necessary concomitant of advancing years, though such a pessimistic view is not altogether justifiable. Undoubtedly the age in which we are living has already brought us many noteworthy discoveries, and private investigators as well as public institutions are pursuing their researches along lines which, sooner or later, will bring us much of the good of which we are in search. But such telegrams as the one to which we refer must be accepted with considerable caution.

Only a comparatively short time ago, the announcement of the discovery of insulin was heralded as the finding of a sure specific for diabetes. First impressions were discounted by subsequent announcements that the drug was by no means a sure cure, that it was more in the nature of a means for alleviating suffering, and of keeping the trouble under control than affording a certain cure in all, or even most cases. Later we were informed that its use might be attended with quite a degree of danger. That the discovery of this drug was a definite advance towards finally curing the disease cannot be denied for one moment, but the disappointment caused by the failure of subsequent tests to prove all the merits claimed for it, must have been great. Consequently the latest report about the discovery of a cure for cancer should be accepted with the greatest reserve until much more is known about it.

The Menace Of The Reds

WITH the formal recognition of Soviet Russia by China, it appears that this country is to become a fertile field in which the Reds may sow their seeds of international discord to their heart's content. A manifestation of their highly objectionable method of playing one class against another, and one country against another for the glory of Bolshevism, has already made its appearance in Peking, where Mr. Karakhan, the official Soviet Envoy, is busy making speeches of congratulation to himself for the successful negotiations he has just concluded, shouting hozanas from the pagoda tops in support of the political theories he represents, and damning all others.

On last Friday afternoon a meeting was held in Central Park in Peking, the rallying ground of the radically inclined, to celebrate the signing of the Sino-Russian pact. The meeting had the semblance of an official gathering, for in addition to Mr. Karakhan and other members of the Russian Mission, and a large number of Chinese radicals, a number of important figures in the Peking Government graced the affair with their presence. At that meeting Mr. Karakhan spoke, asserting that five years ago Russia had made certain promises to China and pointing out that in the agreement just signed Russia had given proof that those promises had been sincerely made and were now being carried out. The agreements, Mr. Karakhan continued, had been made on terms of absolute equality and were particularly welcome to China because China had never before been able to negotiate on such an equal basis with any other Power.

"Russia," Mr. Karakhan said, "has given what she has to China of her own free will, but now the people of China must take like things by force from all the Imperialistic Powers on the same principles of equality and justice."

In that expression Mr. Karakhan has given the essence of the policy that Russia is now to follow in China and in the Far East in general to further her own ends, and made the first of what may be expected to be a series of attacks on the United States, Great Britain, France, Spain, Italy, Japan, and the other Powers who have friendly diplomatic dealings with the Peking Government. It is an out-and-out invitation to the Chinese people to embrace the tenets of Bolshevism, to foster open discontent and rebellion against all foreigners other than Russian—the first small stirrings of a preachment of anti-foreignism that can well grow into another Boxer disturbance, aided and abetted by the Soviet.

It reveals that the Bolsheviks have merely had their dreams for a world conquest in hibernation, to emerge again now that they have had their heads swelled by the recognition that has been accorded them by Great Britain, Italy and China and the apparently successful negotiations that are under way with Japan. Under the stress of necessity the Reds buried their dreams of having the streets of the capitals of the world run red with the blood of the ruling citizenry, but they did not bury them deep, and now with the first flush of victory on their brows they are once more prepared to run wild and swamp the world with bombastic verbal descriptions of the millennium and meddle maliciously in the peaceful government of other nations.

There has been some evidence that Russia was really returning to a state of normalcy, had given up as a vain dream her aspirations to generate a world revolution that would make all countries and nations members of a great Red Commonwealth, and was beginning to grasp the fundamental details of safe and sane govern-

Electricity

Cooking Made Easy.

Electric cooking avoids not only the serious waste of meat inseparable from old-fashioned methods of cooking, it avoids waste of all kinds—waste of some of the most valuable products of a joint, and waste of delicate flavor. The much discussed saving in the weight of meat which follows from electric roasting has now been proved. The saving is owing to no particular virtue of electricity, but to the fact that the oven-heat, regulated with ease by a few switches and a thermometer, can be maintained at the correct degree to cook the meat without the close attention and continuous manipulation of fire and dampers which is necessary to maintain on a coal range even an approximately uniform oven heat.

ment. The Russians' official actions since their successful negotiations with Great Britain, Italy and China, however, seem to have caused them again to branch out in their favorite form of dementia. Now that they have established liason in China, they evidently hope to use this country, torn by internal strife as it is, for their own ends by stirring up further discord, creating an anti-foreign feeling against all except Red Russians, and then setting up their own works in the ashes of the destroyed business enterprises of other nations.

Russia, almost from the beginning of her diplomatic intercourse with China, has played a double game, attempting to incite one nation against the other for her own benefit, and even deserting her natural foreign allies in important questions, double-dealing with China sub rosa, and then collecting at the expense of both the foreign Powers and China. Studies of the Far Eastern policies of all the nations reveal that the Soviet, in this instance, is merely carrying out the diplomatic program long followed by Czarist Russia.

In "Americans In Eastern Asia," Tyler Dennett reveals, through the publication of the actual documents relating to the questions, how Russia adopted in Peking a policy which aroused the suspicion of the American representatives shortly after the Czar, fearful that Great Britain would wrest Alaska from him in a war that then appeared imminent, sold that territory to the United States.

"The policy of Russia in China," Mr. Dennett writes, appears to have been always to conciliate China and win her especial goodwill with a view to capitalising it subsequently, as was illustrated in the relations between Russia and China after 1895. . . In a personal letter, March 13, 1873, Minister Low stated to Secretary of State Fish that he had reasons to believe that Russia was not sincerely co-operating with the other Ministers in the common plan on the audience question. He believed that Russia was secretly advising the Chinese not to yield. He thought that Russia was either seeking to prevent the other Powers from increasing their influence (at that time Russia was particularly influential in Peking), or was hoping to provoke hostilities between China and the Powers, thus creating conditions similar to 1860 which would be favorable for Russia to acquire more Chinese territory. . . There had been many similar episodes in the preceding thirty-five years. Russia had never sincerely accepted the co-operative policy in China."

Today, history is once more proving that it travels in a cycle, for the new Russia, despite its often made protestations of new and fair political thought, is making use of the same insincere and devious machinations worked out by the Czarists of former years in attempting to create in China an ill-feeling against other foreigners so that the Reds may secure the greater share of the nation's trade, spread their insidious propaganda among the Chinese while assuming brotherly friendliness toward the Chinese Government, and overturn the established order of government here even as they did in Russia.

It was, of course, only to be expected that China would recognise Russia, for the Soviet, in its eagerness to obtain a foothold from where they could dispense their propaganda to the possible 400,000,000 Chinese clients of their theory of government, gave even more than China expected. Their terms were little more than: "We'll give you anything if you'll only recognise us and give us a chance to send our missionaries of hate and rebellion among you." The Chinese failed to see the sinister motives that impelled that wholesale surrender of rights and privileges, seeing only in Russia's generosity an opportunity of ridding themselves of one more foreign impediment in their scheme for a China unencumbered with extraterritoriality. As a result of the world war, China was able to repudiate their treaties with Germany, Austria and Russia, abolishing extraterritoriality, refusing to pay the Boxer Indemnity due those countries, and abrogating other privileges. Germans, Austrians and Russians previously enjoyed. With that accomplished, China immediately assumed a new policy, refused to grant the new nations the same privileges enjoyed by the other Protocol Powers, and insisted that Germany, Austria and Russia, upon the resumption of friendly relations, give up the diplomatic privileges they formerly enjoyed.

It is doubtful that China would have ever granted recognition to the Soviet if it had been necessary to give Russians back their former extraterritorial rights. The Soviet was well aware of the present aim of the Peking Government in abolishing and limiting such rights, and the Reds, therefore, merely swallowed a bitter pill by assuming a forced smile and offering to give up the right and privileges they knew they would never secure anyway. The Soviet, however, does not like the idea any more than other nations, their protestations of "equality" to the contrary. There is a feeling in every human breast, however, that if the other fellow is in as bad a predicament as you are it is not so bad, after all. That is now the aim of the Reds. Since they cannot enjoy the benefits of extraterritoriality, they do not want other Powers to enjoy those rights, and the more they stir up China the more chance they think exists of putting all foreigners on a par—as low as that par will be—once more.

The situation in Peking has, therefore, developed into a situation where the Powers, attempting to protect their nationals against the chaos and confusion existing in China, have a new enemy—even worse than the others—to confront in addition to militaristic tuchuns who have torn the country asunder, bandits and pirates who have taken a toll of human lives, dissension and evil corruption among a big majority of the supposed rulers of the country, and the general low morale of the entire country.

The Ministers of the Powers attempting to assist China to build up a strong stable Government that will allow them, in proper time, to hand back the Mixed Court, abolish extraterritoriality, withdraw from the Customs, the Salt Gabelle and other enterprises, and eventually see a China that can take her place in the family of nations and stand on her own feet, will have a strange, strange bed-fellow when the first Soviet Minister comes to Peking. If Mr. Karakhan's remarks in Central Park are any criterion of his views on the question of foreigners in China in general, it is to be seriously hoped that he will not be that Minister. Even now his presence in China is thoroughly unappreciated by all foreigners and a bad omen for peace-loving Chinese attempting to reconstruct their country on a solid, not an unsound theoretical and airy, foundation.

STEAMER HOMERIC CHANGED TO OIL BURNING VESSEL

Overhaul And Reconditioning Completed By Harland And Wolff

The conversion of the giant White Star liner Homeric (35,356 gross tons) from coal to oil burning has been completed, and she has left Harland and Wolff's Belfast yard to resume her sailing on the Southampton-New York route.

The plating work was actually commenced about two months before the ship's arrival in Belfast, and a large proportion of the 720 tons of new material was made in advance, ready for erection. By these means the stay of the ship in port has been considerably shortened.

As 37 separate tanks have been constructed to carry 5,050 tons of fuel oil, in addition to an immense amount of work in respect of removing, renewing, and stiffening, some idea may be obtained of the extensive and arduous character of the work involved. The wing bunkers extend to the full length of the four boiler rooms, a total of 242ft. port and starboard, while the cross bunkers in Nos. 2 and 3 boiler rooms extend right across the ship. A new cofferdam deck, 25ft. long, and extending the full width of the vessel, has been built over the new oil tanks in the reserve coal bunker forward.

To facilitate the work of discharging the old bunker material cut out of the vessel, and the shipping on board of all new materials, the Homeric was placed in drydock for 67 working days. Advantage was taken of the opportunity to have certain other work also carried out, such as the overhauling of pumps, refrigerating plant, ventilating trunks, and various tanks, &c., to insure the vessel being in practically new condition on resuming her sailings.

The boilers of the Homeric are arranged to burn oil fuel under forced draught, an independent oil fuel unit, comprising pressure pumps, heaters, and filters, is provided for each boiler room, and they are so cross connected that each unit is capable of maintaining the oil supply for two boiler rooms. A hand oil fuel lighting up pump is also provided for one boiler room when no steam is available.

The oil transfer pumps, one in each section, are arranged to draw the oil from any oil fuel bunker and discharge to the settling tanks and to transfer the oil from forward to aft or vice versa, and also to discharge into the oil filling range.

OIL BUNKERS

The oil fuel bunkers are filled through an independent range fitted the full length of the boiler rooms, forming a ring main, the oil supply being received under pressure from the bunkering barges through four filling stations on "F" deck, which are fitted with special duplex filters for filtering the oil before it passes into the ship's oil tanks. A large air main is provided to take the air from the oil tanks when filing and from any overflow of oil, the overflow passing into a special drain tank in the double bottom which can be pumped out by the transfer pump, the air being discharged through two up-take pipes, one forward and one aft of the main, to well above the deck houses. These upcast pipes are fitted with a special fan for circulating the air mains and oil tanks.

All oil fuel bunkers are fitted out with steam heating coils to reduce the viscosity of the oil when in North Atlantic trade routes. The condensate from these coils is collected into an observation tank in each boiler room and discharged into the hotwell tanks with a special drain pump for this service only.

Two sediment pumps are provided for draining the oil gutterways and settling tanks. These pumps are arranged to discharge into a patent oil separator, the oil being recovered whilst the separated water passes overboard. This separator has been installed to meet the new regulations of the Board of Trade regarding the discharge of oil in navigable waters.

With the introduction of oil fuel burning the steaming performance of the boilers will be entirely in the hands of the engineers, thereby maintaining a steady supply of steam and thus increasing the speed of the vessel.

Companies Expecting Losses On Pacific

Japanese Shipowners Receive Severe Blow In Losing Emigrant Trade

The enforcement of the new American immigration law from July 1 will be a telling blow to the Japanese steamship companies such as the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, Osaka Shosen Kaisha, and Toyo Kisen Kisha, all maintaining regular passenger service on the Pacific.

These firms are looking forward to severe losses to be incurred by the suspension of the transportation of emigrants on the Pacific through the prohibitory law, and are racking their brains for relief measures to meet the future situation. The steerage passengers carried on the Pacific between Asiatic countries and America during 1923 numbered 51,422, of whom 10,856 passengers were carried by Admiral Line steamers; 3,140 passengers by Blue Funnel steamers 9,988 passengers by Canadian Pacific steamers; 12,043 passengers by Pacific Mail ships; 420 passengers by China Mail ships; 1,346 passengers by Nippon Yusen Kaisha liners; 4,263 passengers by Osaka Shosen Kaisha ships and 8,764 passengers by Toyo Kisen Kaisha ships.

The majority of these passengers are Japanese and Chinese emigrants and the virtual stop in the third-class passenger transportation means a severe blow to the business of these firms.

The Nippon Yusen Kaisha is suffering loss of Y60,000 on the trans-Pacific passenger service a year, the Osaka Shosen Y120,000 and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha the largest loss of Y 600,000. Their losses will be increased on the suspension of the transportation of steerage passengers after July 1 and measures are being considered by these firms to preclude further losses. The only measure now available is in the reduction of passenger fares on the service, thereby attracting as many passengers as possible to these ships from foreign ships and the reduction is most likely to be adopted by Japanese firms during July, it is reported.

Health Association In Sungkiang Holds Lantern Procession

(China Press Correspondence)

Sungkiang, Ku., June 10.—The Sungkiang Health Association staged a big lantern procession last Friday night in the interest of health. Instead of having the procession in one long line, it was thought best to divide the various groups, each group being assigned to a certain section of the city. In this way the city was more efficiently covered and time was given each group to stop at certain thoroughfares and speak to the people on the subject of cleaning up. The students took a good deal of interest in the event and manufactured some real clever lanterns, representing flies, mosquitoes and other things.

This Association is fast becoming a real power in the community and some good effects of it are already seen. The annual meeting is to be held this Thursday, when the ballots for officers will be counted and other measures taken looking to the growth of the Association.

Last Saturday night the Epworth League gave a big social, or show, and a great deal of interest was taken therein. It was held in the McLain Community Hall of the Methodist Mission. There were about five or six hundred present and the hall was packed to its limits. One of the large Girls' Schools of the city gave several little plays which were much enjoyed, besides there were music, songs, sleight of hand and other features.

Tsingtao To Have New Regulation To Govern Labor

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tsingtao, June 5.—The Governor, Mr. Kao En-hung, has promulgated a set of regulations governing relations between employers and employees. They provide that employers seeking labor must state the number of working hours and the wage scale: in a case of misunderstanding there shall be peaceful adjustment of all disputes and no violence: before a laborer can be discharged proper warning must be given and his wages must be paid to the date of his dismissal: no laborer must be punished by his employer but be turned over to the police: any employer guilty of harsh treatment of an employee shall be tried and punished.

Plans are maturing for the establishment of a University here. The Bismarck Barracks are suggested as suitable for the purpose and are being renovated. They will afford accommodation for several thousand students.

Arrangements are being made to hold a Child Welfare Week, commencing on June 19, which will include a baby show.

There have been several arrests of opium smugglers recently. The latest captures were made on successive days on the Kiao-Tsi Railway. A waiter in a dining-car was found in possession of two packets of opium, containing 160 ounces, and the next day sixty ounces were found in a basket carried by a woman passenger.

A large haul of arms and ammunition has been made by the harbor police. Their attention was directed to a godown from which large boxes were being removed. The police examined the boxes and found them to contain several hundred rifles and thousands of rounds of ammunition. The owner of the garage and his employees, who are all Japanese, have been handed over to their Consular authorities.

The Governor has taken up the matter of establishing a through freight service between the Kiao-Tsi and Tientsin-Pukow Railways. Some alterations in the station platforms and railway yards at Tsinan will be necessary. It is reported that the Ministry of Communications approves the proposal.

Spain And Italy May Have Treaty

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, June 9.—General Primo de Rivera, the Spanish Dictator, told a correspondent of the Italian Tribuna, with regard to future collaboration between Spain and Italy, that the Spanish Directory had instituted an economic council with view to the preparation of a commercial treaty between Spain and Italy. The journey of the King and Queen of Italy to Spain was the third stage in the rapprochement, which must lead the two countries to intimate collaboration.

The King and Queen of Italy received an enthusiastic and hearty welcome in Madrid.

Peking Sending Educational Envoy To Europe And U.S.

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 8.—The Ministry of Education has issued an order appointing Mr. Chang Chin Chinese Delegate to proceed to Europe and America to investigate educational conditions. The Ministry is also sending Mr. Wu Shih-hsun, Chancellor of the Ministry of Education, to Szechuan Province to inquire into educational conditions in that province. In connection with the latter appointment it appears that the invading armies have occupied many schools in Szechuan for quarters and stores and representations were recently made to the Central Government asking for the schools to be restored.

Parliamentarians At Peking Fighting Sino German Pact

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 8.—A group of Members of Parliament said to be under the influence of Messrs Chang Yin-hua and Wu Ching-lian, and a second group supposed to be supporters of Mr. Sun Hung-yi are stirring up trouble for the Government in connection with the Sino-German agreement. Both these groups and some Members neutral on this question attended a meeting last evening at the Haian Hotel. Resolutions were passed at this meeting favoring a motion of want of confidence in the Government and impeachment of the whole Cabinet. It was also resolved that a deputation should call on the German Minister in order to draw the attention of the Legation to the attitude of Parliament on the Sino-German settlement.

How Long Should a Man's Legs Be?

When it is asked how good should Glasses for your eyes be, the answer is very much like that to the question, how long should a man's legs be.

Lincoln's answer to that question was that they should be long enough to reach the ground. And the answer to the other question is that the Glasses should be good enough for your eyes.

How highly do you value your eyes. If you place them pretty high, then the Glasses for them should be prescribed and fitted by the
